1. Course Description

In this course, we focus on “money,” which, among other management resources, can be said to be the “blood” of a company, and we will examine the flow of “money.”

In fall, we focus on what kinds of measures are financially feasible to increase corporate value. In addition, we will consider how to decide whether to carry out the business project, and why sometimes, in the course of the investment execution, it turns out not to be rational. The aim is to master the theory established in the field of business administration.
