1. Course Description

Classes are conducted in the form of team teaching by multiple teachers.

Understand the current situation and issues of psychological maladjustment that is likely to occur in children with illness and developmental disabilities, and learn the basic knowledge of diagnosis and evaluation of psychological development, cooperation with medical treatment, psychology and special support education. In addition to conducting psychological examinations and conducting methods and analysis, students will gain practical skills such as grasping and analyzing learning situations, viewpoints of behavior observation methods, and actual situations through discussions and group work. In particular, through educational counseling, examinations and behavioral observations of children with disabilities, we will ascertain the actual situation accurately, and increase the professional competence that will be utilized in the preparation of individual instruction plans such as responding to learning stumbling.
