

Readings in International Japanese Studies I

Syllabus Number

ENG-203

Elective

2 credit

ISHIKAWA, Takafumi

1. Course Description

In this class, students carefully read and understand history essays written in English. Many people may not be good at English, but this class aims to overcome the hesitation to read English literature. Students' English ability is not required. I will explain thoroughly from the basics of reading English. Students learn how to read English correctly and translate it into beautiful Japanese. (* Learning at university is called "study") Also, what you will read in this class is English literature, but it is not "English class". The course is designed to help you master the basics of history as you read and understand famous English sentences. If you can read English, the range of historical research will greatly expand. Let's take this opportunity to try to overcome our weak point.