

International Relations I

Syllabus Number INR-301
Elective 2 credit
MATSUOKA, Misato

1. Course Description

As the world has become more globalized, international relations has become a more important theme to understand as well as comprehending each issue globally. This class provides the insight of the ways in which politics, economy, society and culture has been interacted globally. It also encourages students to think more flexibly and creatively about international relations. As for the spring semester, this course allows students to familiarize existing theories and discussion about international relations through group activities.