

Geography of Foreign Countries I

Syllabus Number

GGR-201

Elective

2 credit

IIZUKA, Ryo

1. Course Description

The world is wide. Cultivating an understanding of local areas and the diversity across the world is important for developing students' perspectives. Each local area has its own natural history, human history, and culture, which are all related to each other. This lecture deals with the features of some local areas from geographical perspectives. Additionally, this lecture covers many World Heritage sites so that students can learn about them and make better use of their knowledge in the examinations of The World Heritage Academy.