

International Relations I

Syllabus Number

INR-301

Elective

2 credit

MATSUOKA, Misato

1. Course Description

As the world has become more globalized, international relations has become a more important theme to understand as well as comprehending each issue globally. This course provides the insight of the ways in which politics, economy, society and culture has been interacted globally. It also encourages students to think more flexibly and creatively about international relations. As for the spring semester, this course allows students to familiarize existing theories and discussion about international relations through group activities.