

Basic Research in Psychology I

Syllabus Number

SEM-201

Compulsory 2
credit

HORITA, Yutaka

1. Course Description

Empirical studies about human behavior have been conducted traditionally in social psychology. However, in recent years, empirical studies about human decision-making or altruism also have been conducted in other fields of social sciences such as economics.

In this seminar, we read literature about recent experimental studies in social sciences. Students will make a presentation using handouts or a PowerPoint, and have a discussion with other students.