In Japan, the total amount of public services (i.e., police, education, roads, water supply and sewerage systems, public pension system, etc.) provided by the central government and the local governments accounts for just under 40% of the GDP (compared to approximately 35% in the US and 55% in France). Public finance is an academic field which studies this "public economy". This lecture is designed as the first part of a main course to learn "essential knowledge" of Public Finance.
