1. Course Description

The expression by modeling provides an important "environment" for children's lives. It enhances children's sensibilities, enriches their expressiveness, and cultivates creativity by fully enjoying activities through "shapes, colors, images" and "feels (textures) of things". Because.

It is not possible to foster children's independence if the leaders involved in these activities are not good at modeling expressions and are conscious of trying to fit children's expressions into the "template" that adults envision. ...

In the class, students will acquire knowledge about activities and educational environments suitable for the development of children through appreciation of the modeling expressions of children around the world, and the students themselves will actively develop the expressions of children and the senses and inspirations of children. I will understand. In addition, we will consider how to connect the knowledge we have cultivated to the subject matter and guidance of modeling expression.
