1. Course Description

In this class, we will study regional management centered on tourism.

Under the guidance of the faculty, students will set the target area for research, and not only conduct literature research and interview surveys, but also seriously think about the issues faced by the area by directly connecting students with people involved in the area.

Ultimately, we will make a presentation to the local government or tourism association in the research area as a proposal on tourism policy or measures.

In this class, students will not only conduct research, but will also experience working on project-type projects that think tanks do so that they will be useful even after they get a job. (4-5 people per team)

We would like to send out into society human resources who have practical skills to tackle various issues.

*Relevant persons will be invited as guest lecturers as necessary.

*Research and proposals will be made on a project team basis.

*Online meetings will be held with local stakeholders (including mayors of municipalities).

*Introduced a mentor system to receive advice from active businessmen.
