

Anthropology 1

Syllabus Number

ANT-101

[VII]

Elective

2

credit

WATANABE, Mizuki

1. Course Description

The novel coronavirus has made a serious impact on our social life, including family relationships, work environments, education, and leisure activities. And we are inconvenienced because of this. On the other hand, the virus has given us opportunities to seriously contemplate the importance of genuine social relationships, education, and the value and purpose of labor. In this class, students think about the kinds of post-pandemic societies that will be created by considering these factors. In addition, students imagine the possibilities and challenges of such new societies by sharing ideas.