

国際政治経済学入門Ⅰ

Syllabus Number

INR-101

[V]

Elective

2

credit

ITO, Hiroaki

1. Course Description

In today's globalized society, the world's countries are becoming more closely intertwined politically and economically. As a result, even political conflicts have a significant impact on the economy. Even environmental issues, which at first glance may seem to be technical in nature, are deeply intertwined with international politics and international economics when examined in detail. In this course, students will learn basic knowledge of international political economy, which is the foundation for understanding the relationship between countries, regional integration, and international issues in which politics and economics interact.